soko loco was developed with two goals.

The first is to make a single player story-driven game for mobile platforms. That's it. A platformer.

It has never been about development speed, sales targets or selling millions of copies.

It's all about the line between fun and quality, and in the end it's up to the player to decide what's fun to play - even if it's kinda hard or a little unfair. What we need to deliver is it's a game you would enjoy playing on 1 Million mobile devices!

The second goal was to make the most fun, most ambitious game on mobile platforms. Has it been possible with soko loco?

speed up JSON.stringify() I wrote a function that converts a list of items to an object to send in a push notification. I'm using native Android, so it is about 30KB of code and it takes about 20-25 seconds to convert all of the items to JSON. This is due to the fact that I am converting all of the items to a string, one by one, to JSON, like this: if (!returnedList.isEmpty()) { var x = returnedList.toString(); //

What's new in Soko Loco:

" are one and the same. In this case, it means "sick as a dog". One might also say "Tricky me ah tuk", meaning "I'm doing it very badly". Inflatables such as grass or beach mats, inflatable swimming pools, bounce houses, and the like are often used for sports, enjoyment, and entertainment purposes. Such inflatables can be heavy and bulky, e.g., toys, can require significant storage space prior to use, and can be expensive to maintain and construct. Such inflatables can also be susceptible to damage, such as to the inflatable fabric, when stored outside, thereby resulting in inflation failure. A number of prior attempts have been made to produce inflatable articles that are lightweight, durable, and stackable. Such inflatable articles typically include bungees, insert rings, or other attachment means to define a predefined shape or form for the inflatable article.

Q: GCP speech to text recognizing accents when the encoding is set as UTF-8 I followed the document to create an English request for a GCP speech to text audio to text API. I used `convert_to_json` function, it works well when I set the encoding of the response to "utf8-encoding" if I set it to "blah, blah", it returns a JSON file is encoded in "latin1-encoding". Is there a way to convert these two encodings to UTF-8? I cannot encode my resources as UTF-8, because I have some other languages encoded as UTF-8, so it would be useless. A: It really depends on what you are trying to do, but here is what you need to know: The blob in for the response, will be available in binary mode, if the encoding that has been set is UTF-8. You need to set the encoding value to UTF-8 when you get the results back from the api. In fact, the data that was send to api, will be the bytes that were sent. If you need to convert text from a binary blob, it is up to you to do it. A problem encountered in many transportation-related situations is the difficulty in attracting the attention of operators of unattended motor vehicles, or conveyances, such as cars, trucks, buses, airplanes, or boats. For
