The web tool, Pixlr Touch Up, is a good Photoshop alternative with free photo editing capabilities that are light on features and heavy on ease of use. Understanding Photoshop Layers Photoshop has a layer-based editing system that enables you to manipulate and modify images by changing a layer's properties, including blend modes, colors, and levels. An image is composed of a series of layers. If you open an image in Photoshop, you see multiple layers that are not visible. In this section, we introduce you to the layers, and we demonstrate how to add a layer and manipulate it. Creating a new layer To create a new layer, choose Layer⇒New Layer. You see the New Layer dialog box, as shown in Figure 1-7, which enables you to specify a name for your new layer. You also get a check box for Lock and Auto-Lock, which enables you to lock the layer so that you can't accidentally change its appearance without releasing its lock. If you select the Lock check box, you see a slider for Layer Tolerance, which specifies how close a pixel must be to another pixel before it gets locked to the layer. The default tolerance is set to 0 percent. Figure 1-7: You specify the new layer's name, location, and visibility settings. Setting layer properties When you create a layer, you can then adjust the settings that affect the appearance of the layer, such as the following: Layer Opacity: When a layer is set to 0%, you can't see it. Layer Opacity values range from 0% to 100%. When you increase the value, you can see more of the image, and when you lower it, the image appears to fade. Blending mode: You can set the mode by pressing the T key and selecting one of the options, including Normal, Color Burn, Color Dodge, or Multiply. Layers are distinguished from each other through the Blending mode. As an example, you can drag a box over two different areas of an image and Photoshop creates two different layers. One layer is visible, and the other is invisible. You can change the blending mode of the invisible layer and then, if you hover the cursor over the layer's thumbnail, you see an option to switch to the blending mode for the layer. To enable the user to select the layer's blending mode, click the layer thumbnail in the Layers panel to toggle visibility

I have in my.htaccess file: RewriteEngine On RewriteBase / RewriteCond %{REQUEST_FILENAME}!-d RewriteCond %{REQUEST_FILENAME}!-f RewriteCond %{REQUEST_FILENAME}!-l RewriteCond %{REQUEST_FILENAME}!-s RewriteRule ^(.+)$ index.php?uri=$1 [QSA,L] I am using some ajax to filter results. What I want to do is display data based on the url eg. and allow the ajax to pass?c=1&parts=red which will then display data filtered for red. The issue is it says that?c=1&parts=red is undefined. Below are the ajax calls. $('#s').change(function() { if ($(this).is(':checked')) { var c = 1; $.ajax({ url: '', type: 'GET', success: function(data) { $('#yellow').append(data); } }); } }); I have also tried: $('#s').change(function() { if ($(this).is(':checked')) { var c = $(this).val(); $.ajax({ url: '', type: 'GET', data: { parts: c
